

Idea #1 - 1:100

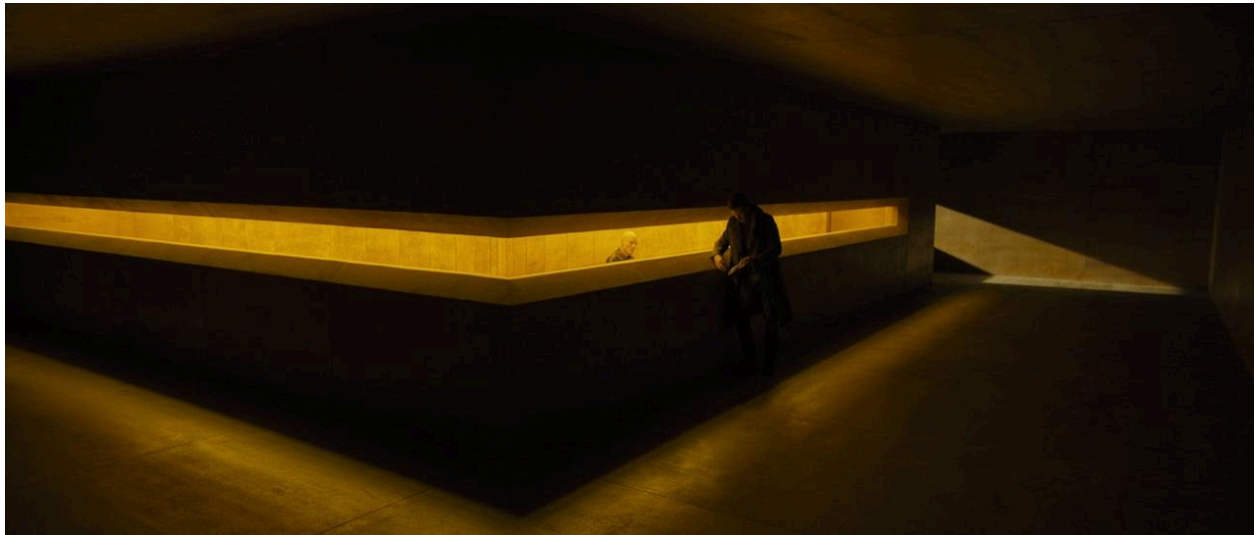

Log Line

In a dystopian world, the ruling class, lead by an elder maleficent dictator, reside in a gravity-warped sanctuary near the earth's core, experiencing 1:100 time dilation. When a young worker is disillusioned by the truth, he assembles a team of like minded individuals, in an attempt to evoke rebellion and change the course of history.

Pixar Rule

Once upon a time there was a dystopian world ruled by an elder maleficent dictator, whose elite class lived in a gravity-warped sanctuary near Earth's core, experiencing 1:100 time dilation. Every day the working class slaved away, knowingly providing the fruits of their labour to those in power, whom they perceived as being "god-like" and integral to societal progress. One day, a young worker leaves his family at the surface to service the sanctuary in hopes of giving them a better life. Because of that, he makes the heart wrenching discovery that once in the sanctuary, members of the working class are prohibited to leave under any circumstances, the conditions are even more restrictive than on the surface. Because of that, he escapes the sanctuary with some esteemed colleagues turned friends along the way, and upon return to the world they suffer the consequences of time dilation, finding their loved ones either dead, or aged beyond recognition. Until finally their pain turns into revenge, they plot to spread the dire societal truths uncovered, dangerously evading enforcement in a generational attempt to evoke rebellion.

Idea #2 - Parallax

Log Line

Beneath his polished exterior, a neurotic stalker meticulously inserts himself into strangers' lives, obsessively manipulating them in plain sight. But one of his marks catches on, cracks begin to form in his world, and he is forced to maintain the facade as paranoia poisons his relationships.

Pixar Rule

Once upon a time there was a seemingly respectable and charismatic man, who had a neurotic obsession with stalking. Every day he meticulously managed his relationships, inserted himself into strangers' lives and manipulated people in plain sight. One day cracks began to form in this sick world he had built himself. Because of that, he suspected somebody had caught on to his game, he thought it might be one of his victims but didn't quite know who. Because of that, he was forced to maintain the facade in his interactions, keeping the mask up became increasingly difficult. Until finally his own paranoia burned his life to the ground, sabotaging his relationships and dropping the veil, exposing him for the fraud he was inside.

Idea #3 - Solipsism

Log Line

A socially awkward psychology freshman moved to New York and became best friends with his outgoing roommate. He increasingly loses touch with reality as his obsession with the nature of self deepens into 'solipsism', a tragic death then sends him into regretful introspection.

Pixar Rule

Once upon a time there was a socially awkward psychology freshman living in New York with his best friend. Every day, he suffered with an overwhelming sense of self consciousness which he couldn't quite pinpoint. One day in class he learned about 'Solipsism' and realised that it perfectly matched the description of his struggle. Because of that, he became increasingly obsessed with the philosophy, to the extent that he often felt only his mind was real. Because of that, he became paranoid, unstable, and his relationships suffered. Until finally a tragic death sent him into a spiral of regretful introspection, putting everything he believed back into question once again.
